COURSE DESCRIPTION: This course is the second half of the American history survey series, covering the period from the end of Reconstruction to the end of the Cold War. This nation's history has unfolded through a variety of events, ideas, and people over the course of this 110-year period. In order to survey these changes we will explore several themes, including: The growth and centralization of the federal government and its role in American economics and society; America's foreign policy and its role in the world; the interaction between people of different races, ethnicities, classes, genders and religions and the impact this has had on American politics and society; and the impact of industrialization and commercialization on the lives of ordinary Americans and the development of American popular culture. We will engage content through assigned readings, lectures, and in-class multimedia presentations, and this course will stress thoughtful reading and reflection, analytical writing, occasional collaborative work, and in-class discussion.

Required books for this course will likely include: Robert Frakes, Writing for College History: A Short Handbook (2004); Edward L. Ayers, et. al. American Passages, vol. II: Since 1865, 2d edition (2004); David Von Drehle, Triangle: The Fire that Changed America (2003); Timothy Egan, The Worst Hard Time: The Untold Story of Those Who Survived the Great American Dust Bowl (2006); and H. G. Bissinger, Friday Night Lights: A Town, a Team, and a Dream, (2000 [1990]).

COURSE DESCRIPTION: This course examines the economic, political, social, and cultural development of the United States from seventeenth century through the Civil War and Reconstruction between 1861 and 1877. Topics covered include: the European settlement of North America and the encounter between Europeans and Native Americans; the development and decline of Puritan society and culture in New England; the development of diverse colonial economies, polities, and societies in the British Empire in the eighteenth century; the political process of protest, resistance, and revolution of the colonies from England and the founding of the United States; the development of the American political system and culture between 1780 and 1820; the impact of the commercial, agricultural, and industrial revolutions on American life; the rise and social, cultural, and political impact of the urban middle class in the North; the development and entrenchment of a slaveholding, capitalist system in the South; the expansion of the American nation and society to the West; and the social, cultural, and political polarization between the North and South which led to Civil War. We will also study the Civil War and analyze its impact on American life. Course grades are determined by performance on three quizzes, a midterm exam, two essays, and a final exam.

COURSE DESCRIPTION: Spanning ten states and three provinces, the Great Plains is a unique geographical area known most for its wide-open spaces, grasslands, and agricultural abundance. Interestingly, demographic growth is hampered both by real climatic issues and by errant assumptions -- the region was called "The Great American Desert" in the nineteenth century and was largely considered a "fly-over zone" by nonresidents in the twentieth century. Despite low population densities and a less than favorable media position, the region has long hosted an amazing array of diverse cultures. This course will thematically examine the cultural, social, geographical, economic, and political complexities of the region. It surveys the history of the entire Great Plains but pays special attention to the state of Nebraska.

COURSE DESCRIPTION: This course examinations the causes, impact, and consequences of the American Civil War between 1850 and 1877. In addition to examining the military aspects of the war itself, we will also look at the war's impact on politics, the economy, society, and culture. In particular, attention will be paid to the war's impact on race, gender, and class relations in both the North and South. Course grades are determined by performance on four quizzes, two short essays, and a final paper.
